Reading Comprehension

According to recent research, advertising is a powerful tool that influences people's behavior. Advertisers use modal verbs such as "should" and "must" to create a sense of urgency and persuade people to buy their products. For example, an ad for a new car might say "You must buy this car now before the offer ends." This creates a sense of urgency and makes people feel like they have to act quickly.

Media literacy is important in today's world because we are constantly bombarded with advertising messages through different media channels such as TV, social media, and billboards. By being media literate, we can understand and analyse these messages, and make informed decisions about what products to buy.
